Gulliver Hump, the local farmer was an auster-looking man and was known nearby as Hulliver Grump.

Last September, things were worse than ever on the farm. The hot, dry weather the villagers had been enjoying recently had caused a drought on the farm. There wasn't enough water to give to the animals and to water the fields, so the rough soil was drier than ever. To make matters worse, the tractor-pulled plow had broken down.

Gulliver was forced to drag out the ancient plough from the barn and tether it to his strongest horse, Ned. While Gulliver battled with the creaking harness, Ned somehow pulled Gulliver into the animals' trough, leaving the furious farmer filthy. Eventually, he managed to get the plough into place and just as he did so, the rain started. Even Gulliver Hump managed a smile.
